Everyman

A brand new play from Nobel Prize-winner Jon Fosse.

Haunting loneliness.

A young man meets another young man who resembles him quite a bit. Both are visual artists.

An older man meets another older man who also resembles him.

And an older woman meets someone who's a lot like her.

The older parents try to speak to their younger son; they want to meet and connect, talk about the years that have passed and everything that's happened, but they never receive an answer. The only person who responds is their own doppelgänger.

In "Everyman", we encounter a haunting loneliness, a longing for companionship, and sorrow over not being able to reach those we are closest to—our immediate family.

"Everyman" had its world premiere in Oslo on April 25, 2024.

One of the most brilliant Jon Fosse productions in recent times.

Dagsavisen

In true Fosse fashion, there's a tension that resonates between the lines. An intriguing ambiguity between what is said and what is left unsaid, leaving it up to the audience to fill in the rest.

Vårt Land

NRK

["Everyman"] is one of Fosse's best works. It's a text that can be both performed and read in countless ways.
